THE citizens of the famous town of Chelm were once digging a foundation for a new synagogue when one of them suddenly paused in his labors and began to stroke his beard reflectively. "What will we do with all this earth we are digging up?" he asked. He was smitten with a brain-wave. "We will make a pit," he said, "and into it put all this earth from the foundation of the synagogue." "But what will you do with the earth from the first pit?" asked his neighbor. The answer was that this was easy. All they had to do was dig another pit twice as large to take the earth from both the earlier excavations.

IT is one thing to read stories of Chelm and another to meet similar situations in real life as the citizens of modern Jerusalem witnessing the increase of civil maladministration, is beginning to do so. Each day lately has been bringing some new scandal which bids fair to make the capital of Israel emulate the legendary reputation of the Polish town. One recent instance comes to mind immediately. Deputy Mayor Porush some days ago categorically denied that there were any overflowing cesspits in the city. He was immediately confronted with a list of such by Jerusalem Post reporters. Each day after the story was published, unhappy readers cited additional evidence which the more fortunate Deputy Mayor can apparently neither see beneath his eyes nor detect beneath his nose — as one such stream flowed right past the municipal buildings.

YET cesspits and cesspools are but minor matters compared with the permanent and irredeemable damage being done to the city by the loose system of granting building licenses. In yesterday's paper a case was reported where a permit was granted and a plan passed for the erection of a five story building at the corner of one of Jerusalem's busiest thoroughfares. The Engineering Department apparently made a mistake and did not notice that the projected edifice would protrude one metre into the street. This week the Council in its wisdom decided that mistake or no mistake its authorities must be upheld and confirmed the license, although building had not even begun and a remedy was still possible. There is a case here for the most stringent investigation to discover if there are not more sinister motives behind the laxity in this most peculiar action. In a report of court proceedings on another page in this morning's paper yet another scandalous case is revealed. This week a veteran contractor who was fined and sentenced to a prison term for contravening regulations. He was arraigned on charges but on these the judge could not find him guilty as the licence granted by the city was "absolutely worthless."

SINCE the Jerusalem plan was drawn up by the Mandatory authority in 1946, real planning here has come to an end — except for certain emergency regulations passed by the city council in the summer of this year. These authorize an increase in the number of stories in the built-up areas of the city. They make a mockery of residential and industrial zoning, allowing work-shops to spring up next to people's houses, and permit manufacturing concerns next to food shops. Cinemas are licensed in buildings which have so little sidewalk that patrons must queue in the roadway, and the regulations limiting the amount of space upon which a building may be erected are so lax that an overcrowding of population (or slums) is assured for the next generation.

THE Ministry of the Interior, a wholehearted indulgence to Jerusalem in its follies is one of those mysteries which can be followed only by a mind trained in the logic of the Jerusalem Municipality Council and if one wants to see a monument to the intelligence and foresight with which their functions in this respect are discharged, one must follow the advice of the great Christopher Wren and look around him. But citizens of Jerusalem had better begin to look around them very quickly or they will find that the future business of the city will disappear forever before they take the blinkers of apathy off their eyes. The Valley of the Cross, Jerusalem's last considerable green space, is now threatened with parcelation and a building programme and who knows what other vandalism each morning may bring forth.

Greek Students, Police Clash in 'Enosis' Riot

ATHENS, Tuesday (Reuter). — Students policed police with thousands of oranges while black-robed priests tried to slash firemen's hoses with knives in a bizarre demonstration against the British and Americans over Cyprus in Athens today.

Police said about 27 people were injured, including police, in the demonstration for enosis (Union of Cyprus with Greece), timed a few hours before the U.N. Political Committee met on the question in New York.

Police mounted special guards on the British and U.S. Embassies before the students' mass meeting. The demonstrators attacked the police with sticks and stones shouting, "You are traitors." Placards in English read "Americans, we prefer enemies to friends like you."

Firemen helped police attempting to break up the crowd in front of the offices of the American Mission in Athens. Friends who tried to cut the hoses fought with the police. The street fights went on for three hours.

Police had cordoned off the university hall where the students' meeting was held. However, led by priests, thousands of students and schoolchildren broke through the cordon.

Meanwhile, all members of the two-year-old Cabinet of Marshal Papagos today handed him their resignations to pave the way for a reshuffle. King Paul is expected to tackle the new Cabinet tomorrow.

After opposition from anti-Government parties, Parliament approved during the night a government bill on the subject's new structure with only a few amendments. Under the bill Council of Ministers, which frames government p.grammes, can refer certain matters of a routine character to committees.

NEW YORK, Tuesday (Reuter). — Britain won a first-round victory today in the dispute with Greece over Cyprus in the U.N. Political Committee.

The Committee approved by 24 to 15 with 18 abstentions a procedural move skillfully piloted by Mr. Leslie Munro of New Zealand to debate and vote first on a resolution of the Council in its wisdom decided that mistake or no mistake its authorities must be upheld and confirmed the license, although building had not even begun and a remedy was still possible.

Arab League Seen Preparing New Security System

LONDON, Tuesday. — Revision of Britain's treaties with Jordan and Iraq came into greater prominence today as the Arab League was shaping an entirely new system of collective defence in the Middle East.

Officials here said they welcomed the indications that "substantial progress" was made by the Arab League in Cairo. The League would be ready to adjust her treaties with both Iraq and Jordan to fit into the framework of any collective defence system devised by the Arabs themselves.

They added that the Arab League's total military strength was about 157,000 comprising 100,000 from Egypt, 30,000 from Jordan, 40,000 from Iraq, 15,000 from Saudi Arabia, 30,000 from Syria, and 5,000 from the Lebanon. The League was asked whether this total could be considered sufficient for adequate Middle East defence, they stated.

General John Glubb, British chief of the Arab Legion, left Amman by air for London today for a few days' visit. The change of his Arab Legion to London on Saturday, will stay more than two weeks. The King, who will be accompanied by Prime Minister Jawid Abu Nuhud, Defence Minister, Awar Nusseib, and Grand Chamberlain Bahjat Talhouni, is making the official visit to discuss the present Anglo-Jordanian treaty.

Diplomatic quarters here today greeted a piece of sound and reasonable thought yesterday. Diplomats in quarters were quick to note that such a provision coupled with the existing Anglo-Egyptian treaty would reinforce the safety of the most exposed states of the Middle East.

Questioned today, the Foreign Office spokesman said that no such Iraqi proposal for replacement of the Middle East treaty has been made to Britain.

Various ways of revising the past are known to have been suggested. At a meeting on the Iraqi Prime Minister, Nuri Said, visited Britain last September. But the possibility of a new pact on the Anglo-Egyptian model was not seriously considered. The Foreign Office spokesman said that the right for the return of troops in certain circumstances was not raised. (UP Reuter).

LONDON, Tuesday (Reuter). — The newly appointed Assistant Secretary in charge of the Foreign Office's Middle East Department, Mr. Evelyn Shuckburgh, flew back to London tonight after a six-week fact-finding tour of the Middle East.

He told reporters on arriving that the Middle East was "a pretty important target for the Communists at this time."

Change Detected In U.S. Attitude Towards Israel

By JESSE KEL LUNIE
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

NEW YORK, Tuesday. — American Zionists leaders detect a change in attitude in the Eisenhower Administration, at least it is not disdainful. No longer will the Assistant Secretary of State for Middle Eastern Affairs choose the platform of the anti-Zionist Council for Judaism to make a major policy address.

The Administration leaders, from the President down, are going out of their way to listen to Zionists, understand their viewpoint and answer their arguments in a friendly spirit. The change of attitude which grew out of small beginnings until suddenly it was full blown, must have developed out of the fact that the Zionists had something to contribute to the shaping of American Middle East policy in the interests of the United States.

The change in the Administration's attitude was exemplified in the address by Solicitor General Simon Sobeloff at the Weizmann Institute Dinner last week. Mr. Sobeloff was a last-minute addition to the programme. The Administration sought the opportunity to make a policy statement from an important Jewish platform and arranged for Sobeloff's appearance.

In two or three sentences, Mr. Sobeloff said (as reported by cable) four things: 1. President Eisenhower had intervened and requested a reevaluation of our Middle East policy.

2. Secretary of State Dulles understands Israel's sense of isolationism and is working to bring about a change in this matter. There is nothing new in any of the statements. Their significance lies in the fact that an Administration spokesman stated them publicly and thus committed Mr. Dulles to take concrete action. Similar talk was given by Mr. Dulles directly to Ambassador Eban as far back as last August. But when it came to implementation, nothing was done.

At a meeting on the Iraqi Prime Minister, Nuri Said, visited Britain last September. But the possibility of a new pact on the Anglo-Egyptian model was not seriously considered. The Foreign Office spokesman said that the right for the return of troops in certain circumstances was not raised. (UP Reuter).

Big Unemployment Drop, 19 Person Informs Knesset

Productive Work Increased

Unemployment in Israel — which loomed so threateningly last March — has dropped from an average of 17,700 per day in 1953 to about 13,000 in the first ten months of the present year. Mrs. Golda Myerson, Minister of Labour, told the Knesset last night in a statement on behalf of the Government. She said that it should not be supposed that 13,000 persons had been entirely without work, but that a larger number had been without full employment.

The Minister said that it was possible to draw the following conclusions: 1. The immigrants have become more firmly rooted in the economy of the country.

2. There is more permanent employment, and 3. The proportion of productive employment has been increased.

It has been possible, for instance, to reduce the total amount of emergency employment offered by the Public Works Department and the local authorities on roads from 3,500 to 3,000 per day.

The lowest figure had been reached in October when the average dropped to 7,500 employed, and some public works has to be temporarily dropped for lack of labour, but it went up to 12,000 in November, paid 45,250 at the end of 1953, to 24,500 in October, 1954.

Mrs. Myerson emphasized that unemployment continued to be concentrated in the densely-populated coastal areas, and that future planning must continue on lines encouraging a general population shift from the centre both to the north and to the south. Success during the past year in expanding the production of both food and industrial crops is previously empty tracts of land would make it easier to press this policy in the future.

Reviewing the labour position during the past year, the Minister said that while an average of 6,000 work-days were supplied by the production of citrus, vegetable and industrial crops, the citrus industry alone needed many as 6,000 paid workers in the picking season. Much of this type of labour was seasonal, and a regular and permanent labour force to remain in these areas permanently by supplying additional work to tide them over from one season to the next.

The best method to do this was to assist workers to establish auxiliary families. It was estimated that such families had given 1,200,000 additional work-days during the past year. Commenced with 800,000 in 1953, the work was financed largely from the development budget and the employment fund.

A total of 17,000 found employment throughout the year on work initiated under the development plan. An important part of this scheme providing for the absorption of 4,000 persons during the year. The system was continued during the past year of giving 12 days work a month to settlers in new villages whose holdings are not yet sufficiently developed to allow them to maintain their families. An average of 6,000 men and women were employed on roads, general amelioration schemes and defence works, during the past year, and a proportionately large number of outside sources of income. As a result, production has increased and the tendency of many settlers to leave their villages has ceased.

These people have been further assisted by the organization of home crafts, mainly for women. These have now been greatly expanded and considerable exports have been arranged.

An average of a further 4,000 persons were employed daily on direct employment schemes of a largely unproductive nature, either to alleviate acute need or to assist the partially disabled. As far as possible the Ministry endeavours to maintain this type of work at a minimum and to prevent its exploitation by labour able to find productive work.

Mrs. Myerson pointed out that work under the various schemes above had given employment to about 45,000 persons out of the 60,000 who had been expected to seek work during the year. This had left about 15,000 unemployed, including Jews and Arabs, plus a further 2,000 young people not included in the Labour Exchange figures.

THE Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee yesterday continued its study of developments in the Egyptian trial of 13 Jews, and will continue to do so as long as the trial continues. The deliberations were attended by Mr. M. Sharet, the Prime Minister.

The complaint calls for an investigation and for an emergency meeting of the M.A.C. An investigation opened by a U.N. Observer on Monday has not yet been completed.

A Reuter report from Amman yesterday said Jordan has asked the M.A.C. to hold an emergency meeting to deal with the complaint that an Israel force crossed the demarcation line into Jordan to kidnap an Arab shepherd. The resolution, offered by 12 Asian and African nations, was submitted as a "conciliatory" move in place of an original 10-nation draft which would have implicitly criticized French and British actions in Morocco.

The 1952 U.N. resolution, it is maintained, however, that it would have been better to pass no resolution at all at this time because of French Premier Mendes-France's declaration that he would deal with the Moroccan question as soon as he could.
